Chapter 1 Summary:

In the opening chapter of “It’s in His Kiss,” we revisit the spirited Hyacinth Bridgerton at the annual Smythe-Smith musicale, a family event notorious for its lackluster performances. Hyacinth's vibrant personality shines as she openly questions the rationale behind attending what she considers a tedious tradition. Her sister-in-law, Penelope, encourages her to embrace the occasion, despite Hyacinth's growing skepticism about the event and her own temperament.

Their playful banter reveals a deep bond, touching on themes of loyalty and the sometimes heavy expectations of family life. Hyacinth also grapples with societal pressures as the last single Bridgerton sister at twenty-two. Reflecting on her past suitors, she dismisses them as either unremarkable or intolerable, resolved to prioritize her autonomy over a hasty marriage.

Lady Danbury, a beloved matriarch known for her candid wisdom, brings humor and depth to the gathering and is revealed to be the grandmother of Gareth St. Clair, a man with a notorious reputation as a charming rogue. Gareth’s impending arrival stirs Hyacinth’s curiosity and sets the stage for potential romantic entanglements.

When Gareth joins her, their immediate repartee ignites palpable chemistry despite their mutual reluctance to endure the concert. Their shared disdain

This unsettling thought leaves her feeling undervalued and hurt, despite the knowledge that he harbors genuine feelings for her. The emotional turmoil casts doubt on the authenticity of their bond and deepens her sense of confusion.

Violet, perceptive as always, picks up on her daughter's distress. While Hyacinth attempts to downplay her feelings, Violet encourages her to open up.
